A Guide to Exploring Level Six Consciousness

By Jeffrey M. Geis

Forward

This guide is designed for all those whom I have manifested in my life to help me with my journey toward spiritual enlightenment.

Your initial reaction to that statement may be one of confusion or resentment, for what kind of self help book is designed for the author and not the reader? As you look deeper into the statement you may even think that it is a very egocentric viewpoint, that sacrifices your entire existence for the self illumination of someone you do not even know on a personal level.

Ironically, if you have experienced either of these reactions it is simply your own ego fighting to maintain positioning in an artificial reality. For if everything that I create in my life is manifested from my own thought energies, than you are nothing more than a figment of my imagination. How can that be? You may ask. You have led a very detailed life, and I have never even met you before. How can I have manifested your entire life without knowing anything about you?

I haven't. Your life is part of your Point of View. Just like my life is part of My Point of View and has nothing to do with what you are manifesting in yours, outside of what thoughts and ideas I push to you through this writing or when you connect to My Higher Self. I know there I go again, My, My, My. We will address the later in detail later in the book, but for now the best way to explain the intricacy of the life I am leading, my P.O.V, and the life you are leading, your P.O.V is to understand that we are all part of the same universal existence. That anything to do with self image is merely an illusion to a false reality that is set up for you perceive information and report it back to the collective consciousness of all that is.

It is for this important reason that this book exists. Not to help aid you in finding yourself in this particular existence, but rather to a guide you to open a bidirectional communication channel with your multi-dimensional self. To understand the difference of that of which we perceive and that of which exists, and to understand, decipher and engage in upcoming onslaught of intuitive information that will prepare us for the pinnacle of creation.

Chapter 1

The Space Between: A Theory of Everything.

Before we can start to understand who we are and what our purpose in this life is, we must first understand the building blocks, to all that exists. The difficulty lies in the fact that all that we know is all that does not exist as we know it. On a cosmological scale we live in a universe that is only 5% matter, and on a quantum scale everything that we know is entirely made up, in all senses, of nothing but empty space bound by energy, with its actual mass just a very small fraction of the space it consumes.

Yet, in this world, we only typically choose to perceive all that exist as actual physical mass. So why is it that we see all that empty space bound together by energy as solid matter? Quite simply, because we are only using our physical senses to observe and all energy thus is filtered by our perception as physical matter. If we choose to observe outside the space pods, we call our bodies, that bind us to the physical plane, we tend to see the energy that flows within space.

Great, so how does one observe from outside their body? By realizing that their body is nothing more than a mere instrument that measures the effects of the physical mass of their conscious manifestations. When we take possession of our bodies it is nothing more than, say, an astronaut who steps into a space suit, armed with all the instrumentation he needs to gather information from a strange planet he is visiting. He uses that suit to help keep himself grounded to that planet, so he doesn't float off. Maybe it has an infrared scope so he can see on a dark planet that does not have sunlight as strong as ours or perhaps it is equipped with goggles that pick up the surrounding landscape and can project a virtual world based on the instrumentation readings, so what the astronaut is really seeing is nothing more than a computer generated imaging of the actual landscape.

Now imagine that this astronaut all of a sudden wakes up with amnesia and does not know he is walking around in a space suit and that everything he is seeing through his CGI goggles he thinks is real and that the helmet and gloves, jumpsuit and back pack are all part of his body, because at this point it is all that he knows of who he is. He will keep this assumption until, perhaps, a strange voice (maybe the captain or a crew member) transmits through speakers in his helmet, questioning if he is alright and giving him instructions on what to do next.

We as humans go through a similar phenomena. We are born into our physical bodies that conveniently come equipped with a danger control system called our ego. The sole purpose of the ego is to keep the body alive. To do this safely it will falsely inform all the senses that compose our body that everything is fragile structure and can break down if not carefully controlled. It enforces a shield of fear around activities and situations that may harm the body that is has so dutifully sworn to protect.

It does this primarily by taking control of the mind, the body's central communication system, and giving protective and fearful instructions designed to keep that body out of danger. Since we our born into this body with the ego controlling the mind, the thoughts the ego project are considered to be thoughts generated by the self, thus the complete body is often thought to consist just of the body and ego controlled mind. Therefore thoughts of existence reality are limited to what the body can physically decipher, with any intuitive perceptions considered mystical or occult and outside of one's self. Moreover, barring spiritual teachings it is logically considered that one dies when their body dies. Yes, the ego allows for the thought that then the soul will move on to an afterlife, but it does not let on to the user that the soul or consciousness is who the person really is, and that the body they are renting to vacation in this world is just property they do not own and not really theirs to begin with.

Consider when you sleep your mind is still until you start to project dreams. In which case you conscious mind is manifesting up entire scenarios complete with backgrounds, loved ones, and drama situations. In the dream everything seems so real, yet when you wake up to your everyday reality, you realize it was all just a dream.

Now imagine, as many of you have sometimes experienced, that when you are dreaming, you suddenly become aware that you are dreaming, and thus aware of your conscious thought, the driving force behind the dream. Knowing that the situation is just a dream you can start to experiment and do things you always wanted to do but couldn't in your everyday world, such as fly like superman, make love to a supermodel, or perhaps perform to millions of screaming fans cheering you on. Your conscious, yet sleeping mind will know it all just a dream, yet try to keep the dream going as long as possible because in the dream everything seems so real including the rush you get while flying through the cool crisp night sky, or the touch and feel of that supermodel, or the rush of energy and excitement you get jumping around on stage as millions worship you. And it is these precise feelings, more so than the actual act that the consciousness wants to experience so they can check it off the corresponding square on the Bingo Card of Life.

The exact same thing is happening to you in your awake life, in fact it is the reciprocal of your spiritual life, with your actual consciousness residing in the spiritual world as part of a Universal Stream of Consciousness, and your body just a manifestation of its thoughts designed to go out and gather information that it does not have access to so it can feel and enjoy the sensations, while learning the lessons of emotional and mental drama situations. Therefore everything that happens in your life is a direct manifestation of thought and intention generated and fulfilled by your conscious thought which resides in the in-between of space and energy.

To understand where this is we must first understand what manifested physiology actually is, which in essence is nothing but energy. Whether it is your body, the chair you sit in or the rock you stub your toe on, the object is nothing but empty space and pools of energy bounded by a larger pool of energy. Everything that is perceived as solid, yet when put under a high power microscope, you can see that it consists of nothing but atoms which in part consist of nothing but space bound by energy- Little solar systems if you will. Likewise when you look outward to this world you see it from the reciprocal value, that we are just a spec on an electron, orbiting around our nucleus, creating one atom of 100 trillion that make up a single cell on someone else's body.

So why is it we perceive these energy pools as solid mass? Vibrational patterns. Our bodies as with all objects of energy in the world we live in, including the earth itself, are vibrating on the same frequency. This vibration gives the perception of mass as the energy itself pulsates at such a rapid rate that it appears solid. It would be the same as watching millions of beams of electricity flowing through two rods. As they vibrate back and forth filling in space, it would appear to be a solid wall, which in turn would create the intention that it solid from anyone looking at it. Likewise the energy force and intention of solidity will make the energy feel solid like a rock or wall.

This particular world, where we perceive energy as solid mass consists, of three dimensions, as we all know – Length, Width, and Height. The universe however, consist of 9 dimensional fields of equal patterns, based on Physical, Intellectual and Emotional subsets. Since the vibrational patterns of this world are set to a physical mold, we often look at Intellectual and Emotional ideals as one dimensional, non tangible, just there. However, if you were able to step outside of the box and look at all thoughts (including intention, intuition, as well as cognitive) as three dimensional or all emotions as 3 dimensional, you will be able to understand how they can manifest into physical object and visa versa. That there is a symmetry from each 3 dimensional field that when overlapped in harmony creates the infinite possibilities of all nine dimensions.

Now to complicate things, just a bit. There a millions, billions or possibly infinite versions of each of these three dimensional worlds, based on the frequency they are vibrating at. These are what we refer to as alternate universes or worlds. They may be very similar to world we live in but my have different situational outcomes due to variations in emotional or intellectual manifestations, or they may be altered physically, due to vibrational differences in solidifying energy.

Basically, each 3 dimensional axis of each 3 dimensional Fields intersect, whereas in the physical domain the vertical axis is of intellect, the horizontal is emotional and depth is physical. We as physical humans focus our efforts forward and behind us keeping us grounded to physicality, however those focus vertically (typically up) and tune in to the spiritual or intuitive nature of the intellect, or the those who are empathetic to emotional energy, will take on a new vibrational frequency, which will enable them to tune into the happenings of those dimensions.

This is important because there is no concept of time or space in those dimensional realms, so by tuning in to the corresponding Intellect or Emotional patterns, one could easily create glimpses of patterns that have yet to form in their time linear physical world. In effect seeing future events that have yet to happen, or in effect pre-membling events that have happened only at a future point in time.

Pre-membrance:

Because we all live in a physical world, and use physical body to observe the physical, thought and emotional energies that make up our world, we tend to have a very narrow view of these energies due to the limitations of our physical receptors (physical senses). We can not physically see outside of our dimensional space, which in turn backs up all time and space which in reality occurs simultaneously and stacks it in nice little linear progression for us to follow like a story line.

In fact if you think of your entire life or existence as a giant jigsaw puzzle with hundreds of thousands of pieces (moments in your life) and you took all of those pieces and threw them up in the air, where they miraculously suspended in random order, floating around the room, you could in respect take a look at any of those pieces and get a glimpse in to the memory of that moment in your life, even if it did not yet happen in the lineage you are currently living in. In otherwords everything that has happened to you in this life or previous life and everything that is happening to you now and in a multitude of dimensional lives and everything that will happen to you in this life, upcoming lives or other future dimensional lives is all occurring right now at this particular moment. It is the NOW, because it is always now, residing in the space between the very intentions that each puzzle piece (moment) spins off.

The trick in fact is to look at this space from outside your physical senses, for your physical sense in fact can only view one moment at a time. This causes each memory to stack up and play forward one at a time in a wonderful story line called Your Life. Looking outside of your physical sense is easier than you might think, since all of us do it almost most of our day. The only difference is we tend to leave our physical reality to get immersed in the pool of abstract thoughts, memories and intention projections that are constantly spinning in our brain. This is merely thought energy of moments past, or pre designed moments.

To truly connect to the actual moments of past, present, future, NOW, you simply have to stop thinking, stay still and present and feel the space between everything that surrounds you. It is kind of like driving a car. You may driving smoothly along the road at a nice clip, when all of a sudden you want to stop and observe the surrounding area you are in. You can not slam the car into reverse to go back while you are still stepping on the gas to move forward. You have to simply stop the car and your forward progression. Likewise if you are always thinking and putting out new intentions, than those intentions spur as new moments in the now and you can not observe them because you mind is constantly moving on to create new intentions. However if you stop the forward progression of your mind, you can exit the car for a few moments and have a picnic at the field on the side of the road where you can truly enjoy and live the moments you have created for yourself.

Once you learn to connect to the Universal Stream of Energy, where all moments and time exist to stimulate the stream. You can reach up and pick any of those jigsaw pictures and experience the moment through not only memory or pre-memory, or though energy, but you can also experience the physical and emotional sensations with each moment.

Amazingly enough, once you know how to connect to these puzzle piece moments, you can learn to connect to them strictly through intuitive memory or true thought energy without leaving your physical sense. This is typically presents itself as day dreams but they are truly glimpses into events that have been manifested but sitting in a cue to experience in your physical world.

Chapter 2

Stages of Spiritual Consciousness.

If it is apparent to all that there are at least three stages of consciousness- asleep, dreaming and awake, it is also evident to most that the forth stage is spiritual awareness. An intuitive feeling that there is a presence above and beyond the physical boundaries that we lie in front of ourselves like a fortress to protect us from the unknown. And thus to a smaller segment lies the fifth stage, reserved for to those who are awake enough to delve into that divine presence in a physical sense. To experience the beauty and silence of stillness, where time has no meaning and the infinite is familiar. It is the enlightened mediator who often catches glimpses of this magical world, even though he is still entrenched in the disillusion of the reality he has created for himself.

To skip ahead just a bit, it should be assumed that the final stage, the seventh if you will, is a the stage above and beyond this physical realm where our consciousness is free flowing and connected to a universal stream of consciousness, all knowing and completely aware of everything. The ultimate stage of being and thus the end result reserved for those who have experience all they wish in a physical state, or for those who are refueling between journeys. It is at this level that there no separation between one's self perceptions and universal consciousness. Only the awareness that all that is, is nothing but an offset of the same universal energy that thrives through all existence. That the mere purpose of our individual life experiences is simply that, perceptions from different view points for the same single identity- all that IS.

It is however a rare few, individual life data gatherers, that know of the sixth stage where the physical sense and higher consciousness are drawn together on a plane separate of the physical known body, a premembrance of a time it is no longer fooled by the illusions of reality and is alone in the physical realm without the dream of other visiting dream bodies. Here is where the physical body is lifted out of a physical world of the many and introduced to its own personal physical world, very much like the enlightened world of stillness and being, for the sole purpose of reporting their perception findings through their own personal portal, their HIGHERself to the Ultimate Stream of Consciousness (USC) or all That IS.

Yes for those of you who have sporadic, weekly or even daily conversations with your HIGHERself, this may seem to be the same reporting mechanism, but those conversations should be considered the same as daily reporting from you own perception as a being in third or fourth stage consciousness. Sixth stage consciousness is more like a formal presentation where you are encompassed on the same level as all that IS. Bi-communication where you can experience and learn instead of just reporting from one side of the equation.

Picture it this way. When you think back on experiences, they are merely memories. You can often remember what you were feeling, but you don't actually have the physical connection to those memories or thought energy. This is the same for when you connect to the USC through meditation or prayer. You are sharing an open channel with your higherself, but this channel is merely set for thought energy. There may be some underlying tones of intuition, spiritual and emotion energy and they may combine to cause you to have goosebumps through excitement and exhilaration, but the channel still remains a thought energy channel. You can describe what it is like to have physical sensations, but not actually demonstrate to your higherself. It would be the same as a Snowboarder explaining to someone who never snowboarded before the rush they get when flying down a mountain at 60 miles per hour, and the weightlessness they experience when they hit a jump and are airborne for a few seconds. The person they are explaining it to can get an idea of what it is like but until they actually experience it for themselves, it is in effect meaningless.

Now, there are stories from those who have claimed to die, who have mentioned that their life not only flashed before their eyes, but that they actually experienced all those life lessons once again. That they just didn't remember playing in the sand at the ocean's shore when they were a mere tot, but that they could feel the sand between their toes, feel the cool ocean breeze, smell the salt air and feel and hear the rumbling of the huge wave crashing on the shore line. For this is their ultimate final report upload to the USC of all the physical sensations they had gathered and stored in their life. After all that is ones primary purpose in a physical life. To intertwine experiences with physical sensation and observe the reactions and report back not only the thought but the actual physical sensation back to the Ultimate Stream, who is by definition of pure energy, absent of any physical sensation.

Sure you can hypothesize that all physical mass is nothing more than bounded energy and the manifestation of any given mass is induced by intention that stems from the USC. Thus a physical reality is born from USC intention and therefore a part of it. However since that physical reality is not part of the pure energy of the USC it separated out as an offspring and not experienced in the same way.

Thus, those who experience sixth stage consciousness, have a very intimate glimpse into seventh stage consciousness, because they are now privy to the actual physical connection to the USC, typically only experienced on ones death bed. Through this shared physical connection, they are now connected on seven layers of their being. Physically, Intellectually, Spiritually, Emotionally, Intuitively, Quantumly, and Cosmically. Although still apparently separated, they are now at one with the USC, like Tantric Lovers, and can sense the all that is as they delve into the Space of the IS. Giving the USC physical sensation, and taking in return the energy of the entire universe.

Those who are currently training in the sixth level are paving the way for a larger movement, lurking around the corner, where everyone with the right level of awareness, proper training and karmic cleansing will be able to vibrate gloriously on the sixth level. However, for those who are not AWake and AWarE enough to revel in the AWE of life, the road ahead may tend to be more tedious and treacherous as they follow a path forged from their own fears and doubts.

So how does someone who is full of AWE (we will refer to as AWESome, because AWfull tends to carry the negative connotation), help those that are AWEless become Awake and Aware. Simply by leading by example, staying connected and expressing their enthusiasm about how awesome life is. The dilemma is that those connected know there is a short window of time help those who are not, but there is a universal law inhibiting anyone from beating each other over the head and force feeding the information to those who do not want it or worse yet are afraid to discover the simple secrets in life. This information must be sort after by those truly seeking to enlighten themselves.

So, for those who truly want to help we will exam why those what drives those that shy away from the truth, look for signs of when they are crying out for help and exam ways of subtly leaving information for them to exam when they are ready. For those AWESome folks who do not want to interfere, we will exam ways of exploring their own sense of AWE so they are ready to lead or transgress when the time is right.

Chapter 3

AWake and AWare

If there are seven levels of consciousness, with the first two levels being asleep and dreaming, and the fifth through seventh being for those striving for modes of enlightenment, then why do most people settle for living their entire existence in level three consciousness with only glimpses into level four?

Quite simply, they are ruled by their body's mind, the ego, and its self defense mechanism, fear, which diverts them from any avenue that will enable them to become AWESome (awake and aware). It also forebodes them from connecting to their higher consciousness, on a unitary plane, for fear that they will realize they only need their conscious mind to exist, eventually ruling the egoic mind useless. So what is the ego and why is it useful? To understand this you must first understand who you are in comparison to who you think you are.

Residing in a physical reality, one tends to misinterpret the physical body that holds them to that reality as being who they are, instead of as simply the instrument that will help them observe the reality they create. To further complicate this delusion, they confuse egoic thoughts as their conscious mind instead what it really is, a warning system designed to keep the body free from harm. Think of it like, HAL 9000 from 2001: A Space Odyssey: a computer design to assist and protect that craft that hosts it.

Since the physical body is bound to the physical world it has a finite life span and is designed to destruct when its span is done. To prevent premature destruction, it has central security system, the ego, which sends messages through conscious thoughts to protect the body from danger and guide it take care of itself. This is primarily done through thought emotions based on fear. Don't walk to close to the cliff you'll fall off and die. Don't touch that hot stove you will get burned. Advice well taken, because most people, living in this world, would like to stay living in this world without damaging their body. The ego does not stop there, however, often projecting out survival of the fittest scenarios creating a relentless never ending quest to protect and shelter oneself. It's not just good to have shelter overhead, and food to eat to promote one's safety, but it will keep seeking for bigger and bigger houses, more and more stuff to ensure that its body will always be taken care of and never be without what it needs to survive.

There is always that underlying fear that it can loose it all at any given moment, so the more it has the safer it feels- as a backup plan incase it does loose something. This lends itself well, to a myriad of life dramas as people interact with each other and their obsession to be the best and have the most collide in competition and conflict with others they are dealing with. Because of this they are always thinking about the past and what they could have done to avoid such conflicts, or projected off to the future laying out what if scenarios designed by the ego to keep control of the mind. The more and more one relies on this information as their own conscious ideas the more and more they relate to it as their sense of self. In effect disassociating themselves from who they truly are.

The irony stems from the fact, that the ego senses a person's true consciousness as its greatest threat, because one's own conscious is not bound by the laws of physics. Its life is eternal and portrays itself in many variations. When the body is dead the conscious moves on, reinventing itself again, and again and again and again. Because Life IS and always Will Be. Those who live a truly conscious life will not be afraid of losing their physical body, for they know it will re-manifest itself a new one when the time is right.

Since the ego only knows that body and will die when the body dies, it will fight to control the mind, consuming it with fear so the conscious message of indestructible life force energy never gets transmitted as physical thought.. Just like HAL 9000, it would rather destroy its creator than let its creator destroy the vessel it lies in.

Chapter 4

Evolution of the Mind

Now there is a growing portion of the greater mass that is starting to choose ego free conscious living, which is part of an evolutionary progression as mankind is advancing to a higher plane of consciousness. As one opens their brain to channel in conscious thought, they begin to realize certain universal truths that are hidden it a primary egoic mind which, as discussed is designed to thwart off unsafe thoughts of universal immortality. Many of the universal truths have to do not only with how to connect to the USC, but also some physical steps to take to help the body prepare to become enlightened and the world to re-energize as it nears the end of a Long Cycle. However, just like the ego fights for control of one's mind and consequently thoughts, as this new consciousness evolves into a larger movement, governments, religious groups and many social groups will thus dismiss any of these new ideas as obscure and foolish, belittling anyone subscribing to their theories. In effect, maintaining control of the masses by making them feel humiliated if they adhere to the so called propaganda.

If you look out at any great social debate from politics to religion, you can see it as clear as night and day or red states and blue states. The arguments are clouded by a myriad of issues, Government aid for the poor, military spending for safety of the home land or my god is better than your god, but the general theme is the same. Those who feel safe clinging to the status quo and are begging to be ruled by fear, and those who want to progress and promote good will for all of humanity and the world they live in.

This is by no means is a way of saying that one political party or religion is closer to a higher conscious state, because like the ego tries to control the mind of its finite body, government and religious rulers try to protect the finite government or religion they are set to oversee. Likewise not every government or religion member fits the mold to a tee, but for the sake of this argument we will take a look at U.S. government parties and what they stand for as a whole to observe why people tend to choose lean toward one side and its impact on evolutionary change.

In U.S. politics there are two political parties that rule the body. Yes there are hundreds of other parties that try to play in the game, but in theory they are just offshoots of the two main parties and if any of them grew to take substantial foothold in the body they would be absorbed by the party they were stemming from.

So the two parties, Republican and Democratic are set up for two main fundamental ideals, which members proudly refer themselves by – Conservatives and Progressives. With this in mind you can get a just of where people stand with evolutionary development. Those who want to keep the status quo and not move on to new frontiers, and those who are trying to grasp on to the evolutionary changes we are undergoing.

Those involved with the Status Quo, are pointed from living a fear based egoic life, and tend to vote for those who instill fear, and promise to protect and secure. They will often follow leaders who show might and choose war over negotiation, to enhance their feeling that they are a citizen of the most powerful country in the world. They are also typically lured in by talk of the American Dream, where any individual can get as much wealth or material possessions they wanted as long as they looked after themselves and work hard for the system. They are also taught that social programs and environmental initiatives are a drain on their personal wealth and thus their own personal attack. They tend to stay lock step together to fight to keep things the way they are.

Progressives on the other hand are much more disarrayed. They are trapped between what their ego tells them they need for themselves and what their conscious tells them they should do for the community and environment. They often vote for issues for community, healthcare, school programs and environmental protection, but will bow down to security in fear that they themselves will be considered weak and vulnerable.

Whereas conservatives will act more like a military operation, uniting on any issue, no matter if they agree or disagree with the direction of their leaders, Progressives will argue amongst themselves and negotiate to get their ideas on the table, often settling for programs that are on the right path but far from what they had hoped for.

The funny thing is, the closer we get to the age of enlightenment, and more and more progressives leave egoic thoughts for conscious ideals, nothing seems to change within the political system. This is mainly because even the progressive party system itself as previously described is the egoic force of the governmental system, and it fears that if it followed progressive ideals, the people would realize they did not need a government to rule them but just a system to help them administer their agenda. This in affect renders that body to what it is, simply a system as opposed to the intellectual thinking body it thinks it is. In fact the whole political system is set up to prevent people from moving forward with ideas that will take control away from the governing body itself. It will create debates between both sides, so that they think they can vote to have their ideal carried forward, but when elected, they will get lost in political red tape until the otherside can revote their members into power. For example, Republicans often vote on an the Abortion issue, but Republican leaders will always lead with that on the top of their agenda, but never try and change the law, because once it is, they will loose a large portion of their voting population who only vote on that sole issue. These debates keep people engaged and hopeful that their issues are being worked on, but all along the only reason that governments exist is to control natural resources, primarily energy resources, to maintain global power and prowess, using its people to spend an majority of their time working the energy source or consuming it. Not everyone works in the coal mine or oil field, but many do work at the Auto plant that produces SUVs, or the ad agency that makes you want to buy one. Or you are simply the consumer, caught up in the thought that you can have what ever you desire no matter what the consequence, purchasing that large SUV, because as your ego continually tells you. Bigger is Better. The more you have the safer you are.

This leads to one of the largest areas of disagreement that stems from a Universal Truth that is seeping into mass consciousness. Global Warming and finding new alternative sources of energy. Conservatives are not only actively downplaying any scientific evidence of global warming as pure hogwash, but also ridiculing anyone who warns of its dangers as "chicken little" lunatics who are making a huge deal over nothing. This strategy, at first, might seem to be purely to protect the big Oil and Gas companies and ward off any competition from alternative energy source, but if that was the case the progressive party would do more than just talk about programs revolving around cap and trade and development of new energy programs. Instead, as with all political systems from the beginning of societal rule, the more natural resources one system owns the more control they have not only over their own people but throughout the global community of political systems. Whether it was salt (the word salary is derived from an allowance given to Roman Soldiers to buy salt), Gold, Coal or Oil , countries bargain, kill and go to war over owning these resources, in return giving promoting to their people that they are they are their to protect their wealth and well being (in otherwords the value of their gold or price of their gasoline). The more rare (gold) or finite the supply of these resources (oil), the more valuable they are to own, and the more coveted the resources become.

However, what if there was a universal energy source, such as the sun, that could be harvested to unlimited capacity to solve all the worlds energy sources. Then the people of a community would have whatever they needed for warmth and fuel, at virtually no cost, since there is never ending supply, that they wouldn't have to fight over to own. This would, eventually, render the political system to what it truly is, just a organizer of the peoples programs instead of the ruler of the people who controls how much wealth and resources they are allotted.

The reason this is exponentially more prevalent in the recent years and moving forward is two fold. First off the limitations of the resources we are currently using. As populations explode year after year, requirements for these resources explode as well, but more importantly is a conscious connection to energy events that are about to take place.

Chapter 5

Population and Solar Cycles.

To understand the strain on the earth's natural resources we need to consider the ever expanding population and its effect on the environment. Exponentially, the human population is expanding at alarming rates, whereas there were only 1 billion people 200 years ago and 2 billion people 100 years ago, we are now approaching 7 billion people with some projections topping 14 billion by the turn of the next century. Sure some may say that this pales in comparison to other species such as Chickens (24 billion) rodents, or even ants (Quadrillions) but when you compare against the total world foot print each takes against what each individual human reaps from the earth there is no comparison. For man does not take up the 2 square feet of land most animals of his size do. Due to egoic needs, a typical family takes up several acres of land to host their house, property, buildings for business, Restaurants and markets to shop, cars, and a thousand other structures to build to keep society running. Not to mention, the energy and food they consume during their life time.

In 2006 humanity's total ecological footprint was estimated at 1.5 Earths meaning that humanity uses ecological services 50% faster than the Earth can renew them and this is expected to increase to 100% by 2030. Withstanding drastic change to how we consume food and energy, as the world population continues to grow the resources will continue to diminish until they are completely drained.

This is cause for alarm on several fronts as the safe guards to moving away from traditional food and energy sources have been very slow as society wallows in what it knows. For example, with food sources it takes 16 pounds of grain , 5,000 gallons of water and 25 times the amount of land to produce 1 lb of beef. That's up to 95% more resources than it takes to make 1pound of potatoes, rice or cabbage. Yet with the world population expansion exploding since the 1950s, there are still less than 20% of the world population that does not eat meat, and a majority of those are not by choice but necessity, in that they can not afford nor have access to meat. Although there are no accurate numbers, vegetarians by choice could be less than 10% of the population.

This holds true for fuel and other energy sources as well, whereas only 20% of energy comes from renewable sources, well below the consumption expansion rate. So how is it that as we approach the points of unsustainability, very few are rushing to change their ways to fix the dilemma?

One of the main reasons is that governments are taking great lengths to disavow the severity of the situations, giving a false sense of security with their constituents. They do this for a number reasons. First off, as previously discussed, governments hold their power by controlling resources. If energy is scarce the people will put the trust and faith with not only those that can deliver what they need but also keep pricing in line with what they are use to or capable of paying. To help keep the façade in full force governments take great lengths to not only downplay and ridicule alternative renewable sources of energy but also use it as an excuse to acquire standard energy sources from anywhere on the earth at whatever cost. Sure they hide the fact that they are raging war over energy prices, by claiming that they are really fighting bad guys who threaten the freedom and safety of their people, but however you look at it every war is a fight for land and its resources.

More Importantly, since world Governments are well aware that we can not sustain these rapid population growth rates, and rather than loose control of their power while they re-educate the masses to live without the resources they control, they instead keep everyone dependant on these resources while they enact a strategic plan to tactically separate a very sustainable 10% of the population from a majority of the masses. Of course, talk of global genocide is typically reserved for the lunatic fringe of the Conspiracy Theory Clan, but as with any theory if you keep an open mind, pay attention to your surrounding and do not dismiss common signs, just because the majority dismiss them as silly nonsense, then you will start to notice how this theory is starting to unfold.

Since the 1970s there have been projections of hitting peak oil in the early 21st century, and with that the US Government has conspired to put forth a plan to overturn the mass power that had accumulated with the middle class by robbing it of all its powers through the purse strings of the government. Kick started by Ronald Regan who played to the greed of many American's by criticizing government social programs such as medicare and social security as a drain on hardworking Americans, and promised unending wealth to all by providing tax breaks and incentives to the wealthiest Americans and projecting that money would trickle down to all.

The true theory however, was to take away all safety net programs from the masses, while bolstering the pockets of the wealthiest Americans. This was re-visited by President Clinton, of course to appease those who were nervous about the rising Deficits, by restructuring the tax codes to for the wealthy, but at the same time opened up free trade, which allowed them to ship their Jobs over seas, deregulating trading policies (speculation) and more importantly, deregulating communication, enabling large corporations to control the airwaves and brainwash people into thinking these policies were helping them. When George Bush took office, he put the original plan on hyper drive, cutting taxes further than ever, and dragging the county to war in Iraq through Operation Iraqi Liberation (OIL), where the ultimate goal was not to rid the world of a bad guy who had weapons of mass destruction, but to steal his country's oil wells, auction them off the Oil Companies and bankrupt the Middle Class of the United States to drive a deeper wedge between the Rich and the Poor.

To help keep the pretense running governments have an elaborated plan of dumbing down of its people through a series of programs including controlling the media, creating fear against those who control their coveted goods, and most importantly through slowly poisoning and drugging its people to pacification through both prescription drugs and Food additives.

So, if it has been written in universal script that the reality on this level, as we know it, is going to crumble to make way for a more harmonious conscious life, how do those engross in the current life prepare and adjust for the events to come.

Quite frankly, the first step is for them learn how to accept and surrender to the situations that are about to be presented to them. For, there are always two ways to look at a bad situation. One is from the view of a victim, who wallows in self pity perpetually prolonging the pain. The other is as a student, who knows that every life situation is a learning experience, for them to enjoy and cherish whether painful or pleasurable. This comes from the knowledge that life is and will always be and if one stays connected to higher consciousness and follow the guides they can pave a new path for all those who wish to follow.

Those who learn to connect to the USC have a unique ability to look past egoic needs for shelter, food and the comfort of the status quo, allowing them to develop new methods of survival that are in tune with universal energetics. For example, if the economy were to collapse and the world experienced 67% unemployment rates, there will be those who have a special skill and are lucky enough to be employed, working for slave wages to keep them just below the poverty line and the rest of the population who do not know how to cope outside of their daily routine, subject 16-20 hour shifts in government run camps for nothing but a small ration of food to survive.

However those connected to higher intuitive senses, will learn to adapt off the grid, living off of wild edibles that have not been man altered or poisoned and adapting to simple structures and lifestyles as was done thousands of years ago. Amazingly enough the further they disassociate themselves from the industrial and technology ages, the more in tune they will become with the energies of the universe and earth, eventually forgetting about the greed and selfishness that has become a huge part of the personalities of the electronic me generations. They will learn to live in harmony working together like a colony of ants, each taking pride in what they do for the good of the community.

Eventually their universal knowledge will start to over run their egoic thoughts, enabling them to experience energy forces as a subset of their own energy sources. As this becomes a predominant truth, they will learn to manipulate this energy to explore alternate realities and discover and develop not only universal energy sources but also the ability to manifest whatever they desire, which absent of ego will be for the benefit of the community as opposed to personal gains.

As the population of this new generation grows, they will eventually be able to reach out and help those who were trapped in the government ruled egoic world to either learn to live in their community, vibrate on higher planes, or open the door to new manifest worlds for them to live in.
